The Origin of Christmas Hampers: A Timeless Tradition

The tradition of Christmas Hampers dates back to the Roman Empire, where the first gifts of the season were given. Known as "Sportula," employers would present their workers with baskets of food as a gesture of appreciation. These baskets, meant for personal enjoyment, were handed out during the "salutatio matutina," a morning greeting ritual where employees would visit their employer's home to receive this token of gratitude.

Christmas Hampers in Spain: A Tradition of Appreciation

In Spain, the tradition took root in the late 19th century when public employees were first gifted Christmas baskets filled with festive treats. This thoughtful gesture soon spread to private companies, becoming a cherished way to reward employees and thank clients. Today, this tradition thrives, with businesses showing appreciation through Christmas hampers brimming with delicious products, perfect for sharing with family and friends during the festive season.
